...and as the event happened on this occasion at the end of February, leap year, the date Feb. 30, "although unconventional, was quite legitimate."

One of Seebert's citizens got mad and stopped his paper the other day because we printed what he claims to have been a false statement about him last spring. He seems to have forgotten the fact that there is recourse at law for persons printing false statements.
As we didn't mention any names in the article in question, the shoe evidently fit pretty well. The truth, you know, is what hurts, and we always try to publish nothing but facts.

There are several things Mar-linton can well do.
